

"I am not siding with the companies when I say the Supply Chain Act must be feasible. I'm taking the side of those who are affected. They can expect something to change, not a hundred companies generating individual risk lists for the same supplier."

"The UN corporate responsibility guidelines can only be implemented through collaboration. Properly designed, safe harbour mechanisms are therefore not a way out, but a focus on implementation rather than administration of supply chain law."

"The Supply Chain Act is economical for all Europeans, from consumers to manufacturers to suppliers to workers. That's because a holistic cost-benefit approach must be paramount."

"The German Supply Chain Act is a milestone in the implementation of the African Union Agenda 2063. It aims precisely at strengthening the middle class in all supplier countries in a sustainable way. And to my knowledge, no country on earth has been able to achieve real prosperity without a strong middle class."

"The bizpando platform is a European product, initiated by the German supply chain law, designed in Switzerland, developed in Germany. But it is a global platform. The simple structures, the low pricing and the integrative concept allow any company worldwide to participate and ultimately to participate."

"Despite or precisely because of global competition, corporate responsibility can only lead to success through collaboration. Any demarcation leads to inefficiency and thus to suboptimal impact."
